The same verb in Arabic, سَاَح signifies to sink, Goth. sigcan. The sense of the root is to throw or thrust. Class Sg. No. 28. Pers. sachan, a word, speech.]

1. To speak; to utter in words; as, he said nothing; he said many things; he says not a word. Say a good word for me.

It is observable that although this word is radically synonymous with speaking and telling, yet the uses or applications of these words are different. Thus we say, to speaking an oration, to telling a story; but in these phrases, say cannot be used. Yet to say a lesson is good English, though not very elegant. We never use the phrases, to say a sermon or discourse, to say an argument, to say a speech, to say testimony.

A very general use of say is to introduce a relation, narration or recital, either of the speaker himself or of something said or done or to be done by another. Thus Adam said, this is bone of my bone; Noah said, blessed be the Lord God of Shem. If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves. Say to the cities of Judah, behold your God. I cannot say what I should do in a similar case. Say thus precedes a sentence. But it is perhaps impracticable to reduce the peculiar and appropriate uses of say, speaking and tell, to general rules. They can be learnt only by observation.

13. To report; as, in the phrases, it is said, they say.

14. To answer; to utter by way of reply; to tell.

Say, Stella, feel you no content, Reflecting on a life well spent? Swift.

[NOTE.—This verb is not properly intransitive. In the phrase, "as when we say, Plato is no fool," the last clause is the object after the verb; that is, "we say what follows." If this verb is properly intransitive in any case, it is in the phrase, "that is to say," but in such cases, the subsequent clause is the object of the verb, being that which is said, uttered or related.]

SCHOOL, n. [L. schola; Gr. σχολη, leisure, vacation from business, lucubration at leisure, a place where leisure is enjoyed, a school. The adverb signifies at ease, leisurely, slowly, hardly, with labor or difficulty. In Sax. reol is a crowd, a multitude, a school [shoal], as of fishes, and a school for instruction. So also reol, reolu, a school; but the latter sense, I think,
must have been derived from the Latin.
D. school, an academy and a crowd; schoolen, to flock together; G. schule, a school for instruction; D. skole; Sw. skola; W. ysgol; Arm. scol; Fr. ecole; It.
scuola; Sp. escuela; Port. escola; Sans. schala. This word seems originally to have denoted leisure, freedom from business, a time given to sports, games or exercises, and afterwards time given to literary studies. The sense of a crowd, collection or shoal, seems to be derivative.]

1. A place or house in which persons are instructed in arts, science, languages or any species of learning; or the pupils assembled for instruction. In American usage, school more generally denotes the collective body of pupils in any place of instruction, and under the direction and discipline of one or more teachers. Thus we say, a school consists of fifty pupils. The preceptor has a large school, or a small school. His discipline keeps the school well regulated and quiet.

2. The instruction or exercises of a collection of pupils or students, or the collective body of pupils while engaged in their studies. Thus we say, the school begins or opens at eight o'clock, that is, the pupils at that hour begin their studies. So we say, the teacher is now in school, the school hours are from nine to twelve, and from two to five.

4. A place of education, or collection of pu-comprehends every place of education, as university, college, academy, common or primary schools, dancing-schools, riding-schools, &c.; but ordinarily the word is applied to seminaries inferior to universities and colleges.

but one of the innumerable schools in the vast plan, which God has instituted for the education of various intelligences? Buckminster.

5. Separate denomination or sect; or a system of doctrine taught by particular teachers, or peculiar to any denomination of Christians or philosophers.

Let no man be less confident in his faith—by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians— Taylor.

Thus we say, the Socratic school, the Platonic school, the Peripatetic or Ionic school; by which we understand all those who adopted and adhered to a particular system of opinions.

6. The seminaries for teaching logic, metaphysics and theology, which were formed in the middle ages, and which were characterized by academical disputations and subtleties of reasoning; or the learned men who were engaged in discussing nice points in metaphysics or theology.

The supreme authority of Aristotle in the schools of theology as well as of philosophy—Henry.

Hence, school divinity is the divinity which discusses nice points, and proves every thing by argument.

men, but a school of vice to fools.

That is, since, or the fact being that or thus; because that. In this form of phraseology, that is understood or implied after seeing; why come ye to me? or, why seeing that, ye hate me? The resolution of the phrase or sentence is, ye hate me; that fact being seen or known by you, why come ye to me? or, why come ye to me, ye seeing [knowing] that fact which follows, viz. ye hate me. In this case, seeing retains its participial character, although its relation to the pronoun is somewhat obscured. Originally, seeing, in this use, had direct relation to the speaker or to some other person. "Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son." Gen. xxii. Here seeing refers to I, or according to the language of syntax, agrees or accords with I. I know thou fearest God, for I see thou hast not withheld thine only son; I know thou fearest God by seeing, in consequence of seeing this fact, thou hast not withheld thine only son. But the use of seeing is extended to cases in which it cannot be referred to a specific person or persons, in which cases it expresses the notoriety or admission of a fact in general, and is left, like the French on, in the phrases on dit, on voit, without application to any particular person.]

SEEK, v. t. pret. and pp. sought, pronounced sawt. [Sax. ŕecan, ŕæcan, to seek, to come to; aræcan, to require; ŕeŕecan, to seek, to come to; forŕæcan, forŕæcan, to forsake; G. suchen, to seek; absuchen, to pick off; besuchen, to visit, to see; gesuch, suit, petition; gesuche, a continued seeking; versuchen, to try, prove, tempt, essay, strive; versuch, trial, essay; D. zoeken, to seek, to look for, to try or endeavor; bezoeken, to visit, to try; gezoek, a seeking; opzoeken, to seek; verzoeken, to request, desire, invite, try, tempt, to visit; Dan. søger, to seek, to endeavor; besøger, to visit; førsøger, to try, to essay, to experiment, to tempt; opsøger, to seek or search after; Sw. söka, to seek, to sue, to court; söka, en lagligen, to sue one at law; besöka, to visit; försöka, to try, to essay, to tempt. These words all accord with L. sequor, Ir. seichim, to follow; for to seek is to go after, and the primary sense is to advance, to press, to drive forward, as in the L. peto. See Essay, from the same root, through the Italian and French. Now in Sax. forŕæcan, forŕæcan, is to forsake; ŕæcan is to strive, contend, whence English sake, and ŕæcan, recan, is to seek. But in Swedish, försaka, to forsake, to renounce, is from sak, thing, cause, suit, Sax. yaca, English sake; in Danish, forsager, to renounce, is from siger, to say; sag, a thing, cause, matter, suit; sagd, a saying; G. versagen, to deny, to renounce, from sagen, to say, to tell; D. verzaaken, to deny, to forsake, to revoke, from zaak, thing, cause, and zeggen is to say or tell, which is the Sax. reogan, to say. These close affinities prove that seek, essay, say, and L. sequor, are all from one radix, coinciding with Cr. πρω to seek, to strive. Class Sg. No. 46. and see No. 30. Ar. The English verb see seems to be from the same root.]

He found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears. Heb. xii. Others tempting him, sought of him a sign. Luke xi.

3. Seek is followed sometimes by out or after. To seek out, properly implies to look for a specific thing among a number. But in general, the use of out and after with seek, is unnecessary and inelegant. To seek God, his name, or his face, in Scripture, to ask for his favor, direction and assistance. Ps. lxi. lxxxiii.

God seeks men, when he fixes his love on them, and by his word and Spirit, and the righteousness of Christ, reclaims and recovers them from their miserable condition as sinners. Ezek. xxxiv. Ps. cxix. Luke xv.

SEEM, v. i. [G. ziemen, to become, to be fit or suitable; geziemen, to become, to be seem, to be meet, decent, seemly. In D. zweemen is to be like, to resemble, and taamen is to fit or suit, to become. In Dan. söm is a seam, and sömmen, signifies to hem, and also to become, to beseem, to be suitable, decent or seemly. This is certainly the G. ziemen; hence we see that seam and seem are radically the same word; It. sembrare, to seem; sembiante, like, similar, resembling; rassemblare, to resemble; Sp. semejar, to be like; Fr. sembler, to seem, to appear. These words seem to be of one family, having for their radical sense, to extend to, to meet, to unite, to come together, or to press together. If so, the Dutch taamen leads us to the oriental roots, Heb. Ch. & Syr. דָּמָה damah, to be like; Eth. ለአዳም adam, to please, to suit; Ar. أَدَمَ adama, to add, to unite, to agree, to suit, to conciliate, to confirm concord. Class Dm. No. 5. and 7. These verbs are radically one, and in these we find the primary sense of Adam; likeness, or form.]

See Selvedge.]

1. In old authors, this word sometimes signifies particular, very, or same. "And on 8am rylfan zeape;" in that same year, that very year. Sax. Chron. A. D. 1052, 1061.

Shoot another arrow that self way. Shak.
On these self hills. Raleigh.
At that self moment enters Palamon. Dryden.

In this sense, self is an adjective, and is now obsolete, except when followed by same; as, on the self-same day; the self-same hour; the self-same thing; which is tautology. Matth. viii.

2. In present usage, self is united to certain personal pronouns and pronominal adjectives, to express emphasis or distinction; also when the pronoun is used reciprocally. Thus for emphasis, I myself will write; I will examine for myself. Thou thyself shalt go; thou shalt see for thyself. You yourselves shall write; you shall see for yourselves. He himself shall write; he shall examine for himself. She herself shall write; she shall examine for herself. The child itself shall be carried; it shall be present itself.

Reciprocally, I abhor myself; thou enrichest thyself; he loves himself; she admires herself; it pleases itself; we value ourselves; ye hurry yourselves; they see themselves. I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; he did not hurt me, I hurt myself.

Except when added to pronouns used reciprocally, self serves to give emphasis to the pronoun, or to render the distinction expressed by it more emphatical. "I myself will decide," not only expresses my determination to decide, but the determination that no other shall decide.

Himself, herself, themselves, are used in the nominative case, as well as in the objective.

Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples. John iv. See Matth. xxiii. 4.

A person, male or female, that attends another for the purpose of performing menial offices for him, or who is employed by another for such offices or for other labor, and is subject to his command. The word is correlative to master. Servant differs from slave, as the servant's subjection to a master is voluntary, the slave's is not. Every slave is a servant, but every servant is not a slave.

Servants are of various kinds; as, household or domestic servants, menial servants; laborers, who are hired by the day, week or other term, and do not reside with their employers, or if they board in the same house, are employed abroad and not in domestic services; apprentices, who are bound for a term of years to serve a master, for the purpose of learning his trade or occupation.

SERV'ANT, v. t. To subject. [Not in use.] Shak.

SERVE, v. t. serv. [Fr. servir; It. servire; Sp. servir; from L. servia. This verb is supposed to be from the noun servus, a servant or slave, and this from servo, to keep. If servus originally was a slave, he was probably so named from being preserved and taken prisoner in war, or more probably from being bound, and perhaps from the Shemitic עָבַד, עָבַר, to bind. But the sense of servant is generally a waiter, one who attends or waits, and from the sense of stopping, holding, remaining.]

Ch. šebē is seven; Ar. سبع to fill. With this orthography coincides the spelling of the Teutonic and Gothic words, whose elements are Sb, or their cognates. But the Latin and Sanscrit have a third radical letter, as has the Persic, viz. t, and these coincide with the Ar. سبت sabata, to observe the sabbath, to rest, Heb. Ch. & Syr. šabā.

It is obvious then that seven had its origin in these verbs, and if the Persic and Greek words are from the same source, which is very probable, we have satisfactory evidence that the sibilant letter s has been changed into an aspirate. 2. Sexual system, in botany, the system which ascribes to vegetables the distinction of sexes, supposes that plants are male and female, each sex furnished with appropriate organs or parts; the male producing a pollen or dust which fecundates the stigma of the pistil or female organ, and is necessary to render it prolific. It is found however that most plants are hermaphrodite, the male and female organs being contained in the same flower. This doctrine was taught to a certain extent, by Theophrastus, Dioscorides and Pliny among the ancients, but has been more fully illustrated by Cæsalpinus, Grew, Camerarius, Linnæus and many others among the moderns. *Milne. In Norfolk, shack extends to the common for hogs, in all men's grounds, from harvest to seed-time; whence to go a-shack, is to feed at large. Cowel. Encyc.

In New England, shack is used in a somewhat similar sense for mast or the food of swine, and for feeding at large or in the forest, [for we have no manors,] and I have heard a shiftless fellow, a low itinerant beggar, a vagabond, called a shack.

The Gr. σκια is probably the same word contracted, and perhaps σκοτος, darkness. In the sense of cutting off or separating, this word coincides exactly, as it does in elements, with the G. scheiden, L. scindo, for scido, which is formed on caedo, to strike off. Hence Sax. ꝛceab, distinction, L. scutum, a shield, Sp. escudo; that which cuts off or intercepts. Owen deduces the Welsh word from cawd, something that incloses; but probably the sense is that which cuts off or defends.]*

1. Literally, the interception, cutting off or interruption of the rays of light; hence, the obscurity which is caused by such interception. Shade differs from shadow, as it implies no particular form or definite limit; whereas a shadow represents in form the object which intercepts the light. SHAL, } v. i. verb auxiliary. pret. should.

SHALL, } [Sax. ŷcealan, ŷcylan, to be obliged. It coincides in signification nearly with ought, it is a duty, it is necessary; D. zal, zul; G. soll; Sw. skola, pret. skulle; Dan. skal, skulle, skulde. The German and Dutch have lost the palatal letter of the verb; but it appears in the derivative G. schuld, guilt, fault, culpability, debt; D. schuld, id.; Sw. skuld, Dan. skyld, debt, fault, guilt; skylder, to owe; Sax. ŷcyle, debt, offense, L. scelus. The literal sense is to hold or be held, hence to owe, and hence the sense of guilt, a being held, bound or liable to justice and punishment. In the Teutonic dialects, schulden, skyld, are used in the Lord's prayer, as "forgive us our debts," but neither debt nor trespass expresses the exact idea, which includes sin or crime, and liability to punishment. The word seems to be allied in origin to skill, L. calleo, to be able, to know. See Skill. Shall is defective, having no infinitive, imperative or participle. It ought to be written shal, as the original has one l only, and it has one only in shalt and should.]

1. Shall is primarily in the present tense, and in our mother tongue was followed by a verb in the infinitive, like other verbs. "Ic ŷceal ꝥam ðe beon ꝥerullob," I have need to be baptized of thee. Matth. iii. "Ic nu ŷceal ꝥingan ꝥap-cꝥiðar," I must now sing mournful songs. Boethius.

We still use shall and should before another verb in the infinitive, without the sign to; but the signification of shall is considerably deflected from its primitive sense. It is now treated as a mere auxiliary to other verbs, serving to form some of the tenses. In the present tense, shall, before a verb in the infinitive, forms the future tense; but its force and effect are different with the different persons or personal pronouns. Thus in the first person, shall simply foretells or declares what will take place; as, I or we shall ride to town on Monday. This declaration simply informs another of a fact that is to take place. The sense of shall here is changed from an expression of need or duty, to that of previous statement or information, grounded on intention or resolution. When uttered with emphasis, "I shall go," it expresses firm determination, but not a promise.

2. In the second and third persons, shall implies a promise, command or determination. "You shall receive your wages," "he shall receive his wages," imply that you or he ought to receive them; but usage gives to these phrases the force of a promise in the person uttering them.

When shall is uttered with emphasis in such phrases, it expresses determination in the speaker, and implies an authority to enforce the act. "Do you refuse to go? Does he refuse to go? But you or he shall go."

3. Shall I go, shall he go, interrogatively, asks for permission or direction. But shall you go, asks for information of another's intention.

4. But after another verb, shall, in the third person, simply foretells. He says that he shall leave town to-morrow. So also in the second person; you say that you shall ride to-morrow.

5. After if, and some verbs which express condition or supposition, shall, in all the persons, simply foretells; as,

If { I shall say, or we shall say,
Thou shalt say, ye or you shall say,
He shall say, they shall say.

6. Should, in the first person, implies a conditional event. "I should have written a letter yesterday, had I not been interrupted." Or it expresses obligation, and that in all the persons.

I should, } have paid the bill on de-
Thou shouldst, } mand; it was my duty,
He should, } your duty, his duty to pay
You should, } the bill on demand, but it was not paid.

7. Should, though properly the past tense of shall, is often used to express a contingent future event; as, if it should rain to-morrow; if you should go to London next week; if he should arrive within a month. In like manner after though, grant, admit, allow.

This denomination of money still subsists in the United States, although there is no coin of that value current, except the Spanish coin of 12½ cents, which is a shilling in the money of the state of New York. In some states, shire is used as the constituent part of the name of a county, as Berkshire, Hampshire, in Massachusetts. seña; L. signum; Sax. yezen; Arm. sygn, syn; Ir. sighin; G. zeichen; Sans. zaga.

From the last three words it appears that n is not radical; the elements being Sg. If so, and the G. zeichen is of this family, then we learn that sign is only a dialectical orthography of token, for zeichen is the D. teeken, Dan. tegn, Sw. tecken, coinciding perhaps with Gr. δεικνυμι.]

1. A token; something by which another thing is shown or represented; any visible thing, any motion, appearance or event which indicates the existence or approach of something else. The signs are reckoned from the point of intersection of the ecliptic and equator at the vernal equinox, and are named respectively, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricornus, Aquarius, Pisces. These names are borrowed from the constellations of the zodiac of the same denomination, which were respectively comprehended within the foregoing equal divisions of the ecliptic, at the time when those divisions were first made; but on account of the precession of the equinoxes, the positions of these constellations in the heavens no longer correspond with the divisions of the ecliptic of the same name, but are considerably in advance of them. Thus the constellation Aries, is now in that part of the ecliptic called Taurus.

A signal may be a motion of the hand, the raising of a flag, the firing of a gun, or any thing which, being understood by persons at a distance, may communicate notice.

Signals are particularly useful in the navigation of fleets and in naval engagements. There are day-signals, which are usually made by the sails, by flags and pendants, or guns; night-signals, which are lanterns disposed in certain figures, or false fires, rockets, or the firing of guns; fog-signals, which are made by sounds, as firing of guns, beating of drums, ringing of bells, &c. There are signals of evolution, addressed to a whole fleet, to a division or to a squadron; signals of movements to particular ships; and signals of service, general or particular. SIMULATION, n. [Fr. from L. simulatio.] The act of feigning to be that which is not; the assumption of a deceitful appearance or character. Simulation differs from dissimulation. The former denotes the assuming of a false character; the latter denotes the concealment of the true character. Both are comprehended in the word hypocrisy.

SIMULTANEOUS, a. [Fr. simultanée; Sp. simultaneo; from L. simul, at the same time.] Existing or happening at the same time; as, simultaneous events. The exchange of ratifications may be simultaneous.

SIMULTANEOUSLY, adv. At the same time.

SIMULTANEOUSNESS, n. The state or quality of being or happening at the same time; as, the simultaneousness of transactions in two different places.

SIN, n. [Sax. syn or rýn; G. sünde; D. zonde; Sw. & Dan. synd; Lapponic, Finnish, sindu; allied perhaps to Ir. sainim, to alter, to vary, to sunder.] The primary sense is probably to depart, to wander.]

1. The voluntary departure of a moral agent from a known rule of rectitude or duty, prescribed by God; any voluntary transgression of the divine law, or violation of a divine command; a wicked act; iniquity. Sin is either a positive act in which a known divine law is violated, or it is the voluntary neglect to obey a positive divine command, or a rule of duty clearly implied in such command. Sin comprehends not actions only, but neglect of known duty, all evil thoughts, purposes, words and desires, whatever is contrary to God's commands or law. 1 John iii. Matth. xv. James iv.

S I N

Sinners neither enjoy the pleasures of sin, nor the peace of piety. Rob. Hall.

Among divines, sin is original or actual. Actual sin, above defined, is the act of a moral agent in violating a known rule of duty. Original sin, as generally understood, is native depravity of heart; that want of conformity of heart to the divine will, that corruption of nature or deterioration of the moral character of man, which is supposed to be the effect of Adam's apostasy; and which manifests itself in moral agents by positive acts of disobedience to the divine will, or by the voluntary neglect to comply with the express commands of God, which require that we should love God with all the heart and soul and strength and mind, and our neighbor as ourselves. This native depravity or alienation of affections from God and his law, is supposed to be what the apostle calls the carnal mind or mind-fulness, which is enmity against God, and is therefore denominated sin or sinfulness.

Unpardonable sin, or blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, is supposed to be a malicious and obstinate rejection of Christ and the Gospel plan of salvation, or a contemptuous resistance made to the influences and convictions of the Holy Spirit. Matth. xii.

2. A sin-offering; an offering made to atone for sin.

He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin. 2 Cor. v.

3. A man enormously wicked. [Not in use.] Shak.

Sin differs from crime, not in nature, but in application. That which is a crime against society, is sin against God.

SIN, v. i. [Sax. rýngian, rýngian.] To depart voluntarily from the path of duty prescribed by God to man; to violate the divine law in any particular, by actual transgression or by the neglect or non-observance of its injunctions; to violate any known rule of duty.

All have sinned and come short of the glory of God. Rom. iii.

It is followed by against.

Against thee, thee only, have I sinned. Ps. li.

2. To offend against right, against men or society; to trespass.

I am a man

More sinn'd against than sinning. Shak.

Of order, sins against th' eternal cause. Pope.

SINCE, prep. or adv. [Sw. sedan; Dan. siden; D. sint; supposed to be contracted from Sax. rýþþan, which is from rýþan, to pass, to go; and rýþþan may be the participle, and denote past, gone, and hence after, afterward. Síp in Saxon, has a like sense. Our early writers used rýþ, rýþen, rýþence; the latter is evidently a corruption of rýþþan. It may be doubted whether Sw. sen, Dan. seen, slow, late, is a contraction of this word; more probably it is not.]

1. After; from the time that. The proper signification of since is after, and its appropriate sense includes the whole period between an event and the present time. I have not seen my brother since January.

The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming. Gen. xxx.

—Holy prophets, who have been since the world began. Luke i. John ix.

Since then denotes, during the whole time after an event; or at any particular time during that period.

2. Ago; past; before this. "About two years since, an event happened," that is, two years having passed.

3. Because that; this being the fact that.

Since truth and constancy are vain,

Since neither love nor sense of pain

Nor force of reason can persuade,

Then let example be obey'd. Granville.

Since, when it precedes a noun, is called a preposition, but when it precedes a sentence it is called an adverb. The truth is, the character of the word is the same in both cases. It is probably an obsolete participle, and according to the usual classification of words, may be properly ranked with the prepositions. In strictness, the last clause of the passage above cited is the case absolute. "The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming," that is, my arrival being past. So, since the world began, is strictly past the world began, the beginning of the world being past. In the first case, since, considered as a preposition, has coming, a noun, for its object, and in the latter case, the clause of a sentence. So we say, against your arrival, or against you come.

Arbutnot.

I would have all gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere.

In Heb. כסל is foolish, perverse, and as a verb, to pervert, to be foolish or perverse; in Ch. to understand or consider, to look, to regard, to cause to know, whence knowledge, knowing, wise, wisdom, understanding; Rab. to be ignorant or foolish; Syr. to be foolish, to wander in mind, also to cause to understand, to know, to perceive, to discern, also to err, to do wrong, to sin, to fail in duty; whence foolish, folly, ignorance, error, sin, and understanding; Sam. to be wont or accustomed, to look or behold. The same verb with ש, Heb. שכל signifies to understand, to be wise, whence wisdom, understanding, also to waste, to scatter or destroy, to bereave, also to prosper; Ch. to understand; שכל to complete, to perfect; כלל with a prefix. This signifies also to found, to lay a foundation; Syr. to found, also to finish, complete, adorn, from the same root; Ar. شکل shakala, to bind or tie, whence Eng. shackles; also to be dark, obscure, intricate, difficult, to form, to make like, to be of a beautiful form, to know, to be ignorant, to agree, suit or become. These verbs appear to be formed on the root כל, כל to hold or restrain, which coincides in signification with the Ch. & Eth. כל to be able, L. calleo, that is, to strain, stretch, reach, and with כלל to perfect, that is, to make sound, or to reach the utmost limit. The sense of folly, error, sin, perverseness, is from wandering, deviation, Gr. σκολιος; the sense of skill and understanding is from separation, discernment, or from taking, holding or reaching to, for strength and knowledge are allied, and often from tension. The sense of ignorance and error is from wandering or deviation, or perhaps it proceeds from a negative sense given to the primary verb by the prefix, like ex in Latin, and s in Italian. The Arabic sense of binding and shackles is from straining. The Eng. shall and should belong to this family.]

This verb, if from the root of G. stehen, D. staan, Dan. staaer, Sw. stå, Sans. sta, L. sto, is a derivative from the noun, which is formed from the participle of the original verb. In this case, the noun should properly precede the verb. It may be here remarked that if stan is the radical word, stand and L. sto cannot be from the same stock. But stand in the pret. is stood, and sto forms steti. This induces a suspicion that stan is not the root of stand, but that n is casual. STEAM, n. [Sax. ream, ream; D. stoom.]

The vapor of water; or the elastic, aeriform fluid generated by heating water to the boiling point. When produced under the common atmospheric pressure, its elasticity is equivalent to the pressure of the atmosphere, and it is called low steam; but when heated in a confined state, its elastic force is rapidly augmented, and it is then called high steam. On the application of cold, steam instantly returns to the state of water, and thus forms a sudden vacuum. From this property, and from the facility with which an elastic force is generated by means of steam, this constitutes a mechanical agent at once the most powerful and the most manageable, as is seen in the vast and multiplied uses of the steam engine.

Steam is invisible, and is to be distinguished from the cloud or mist which it forms in the air, that being water in a minute state of division, resulting from the condensation of steam.

tican*, to strike; D. stryken, to strike, and to stroke, to smooth, to anoint or rub over, to slide; G. streichen, to pass, move or streg, a stroke; stryger, to rub, to stroke, to strike, to trim, to iron or smooth, to strike, as sails, to whip, to play on a violin,

We see that strike, stroke and streak, and the L. stringo, whence strain, strict, stricture, &c., are all radically one word. Strong is of the same family. Hence our sense of striking a measure of grain, and strike, strickle, and a stroke of the pencil in painting. Hence the use of stricken, applied to age, worn with age, as in the L. strigo, the same word differently applied. Hence also we see the propriety of the use of stricture, applied to criticism. It seems to be formed on the root of rake and stretch.]

1. A well known substance manufactured chiefly from the sugar-cane, arundo saccharifera; but in the United States, great quantities of this article are made from the sugar maple; and in France, a few years since, it was extensively manufactured from the beet. The saccharine liquor is concentrated by boiling, which expels the water; lime is added to neutralize the acid that is usually present; the grosser impurities rise to the surface, and are separated in the form of scum; and finally as the liquor cools, the sugar separates from the molasses in grains. The sirup or molasses is drained off, leaving the sugar in the state known in commerce by the name of raw or muscovado sugar. This is farther purified by means of clay, or more extensively by bullocks' blood, which forming a coagulum, envelops the impurities. Thus clarified, it takes the names of lump, loaf, refined, &c. according to the different degrees of purification. Sugar is a proximate element of the vegetable kingdom, and is found in most ripe fruits, and many farinaceous roots. By fermentation, sugar is converted into alcohol, and hence forms the basis of those substances which are used for making intoxicating liquors, as melasses, grapes, apples, malt, &c.

In New England, I believe this word is never applied to marsh, or the boggy land made by the overflowing of salt water, but always to low soft ground in the interior country; wet and spungy land, but not usually covered with water. This is the true meaning of the word. Swamps are often mowed. In England, the word is explained in books by boggy land, morassy or marshy ground.

SWARM, n. swarm. [Sax. sƿearm; G. schwarm; D. zwerm; Dan. sverm; Sw. svärm.] This seems to be formed on the root of warm. The Sp. hervir, to boil, to swarm, is the L. ferveo, and boiling is very expressive of the motions of a swarm of bees. See the Verb.]

1. In a general sense, a large number or body of small animals or insects, particularly when in motion; but appropriately, a great number of honey bees which emigrate from a hive at once, and seek new lodgings under the direction of a queen; or a like body of bees united and settled permanently in a hive. NOTE.—This, by the common people in New England, is pronounced squirm or squurm, and it is evidently formed on worm, indicating that worm and warm, on which swarm and squirm are formed, are radically the same word. The primary sense is to bend, wind, twist, as a worm, or a swarm of bees. It may be formed on the root of veer, vary.

SYLLABLE, n. [L. syllaba; Gr. συλλαβή, from συλλαβεῖν, to comprehend; συν and λαμβάνω, to take.]

1. A letter, or a combination of letters, uttered together, or at a single effort or impulse of the voice. A vowel may form a syllable by itself, as a, the definitive, or in amen; e in even; o in over, and the like. A syllable may also be formed of a vowel and one consonant, as in go, do, in, at; or a syllable may be formed by a vowel with two articulations, one preceding, the other following it, as in can, but, tun; or a syllable may consist of a combination of consonants, with one vowel or diphthong, as strong, short, camp, voice.

A syllable sometimes forms a word, and is then significant, as, in go, run, write, sun, moon. In other cases, a syllable is merely part of a word, and by itself is not significant. Thus ac, in active, has no signification.

At least one vowel or open sound is essential to the formation of a syllable; hence in every word there must be as many syllables as there are single vowels, or single vowels and diphthongs. A word is called according to the number of syllables it contains, viz.

Monosyllable, a word of one syllable.

Dissyllable, a word of two syllables.

Trisyllable, a word of three syllables.

A form of reasoning or argument, consisting of three propositions, of which the two first are called the premises, and the last the conclusion. In this argument, the conclusion necessarily follows from the premises; so that if the two first propositions are true, the conclusion must be true, and the argument amounts to demonstration. Thus,

An oak is a plant;

Therefore an oak has not the power of locomotion.

T A B

T IS the twentieth letter of the English Alphabet, and a close consonant. It represents a close joining of the end of the tongue to the root of the upper teeth, as may be perceived by the syllable at, et, ot, ut, in attempting to pronounce which, the voice is completely intercepted. It is therefore numbered among the mutes, or close articulations, and it differs from d chiefly in its closeness; for in pronouncing ad, ed, we perceive the voice is not so suddenly and entirely intercepted, as in pronouncing at and et. T by itself has one sound only, as in take, turn, bat, bolt, smite, bitter. So we are accustomed to speak; but in reality, t can be hardly said to have any sound at all. Its use, like that of all mute articulations, is to modify the manner of uttering the vocal sound which precedes or follows it.

When t is followed by h, as in think and that, the combination really forms a distinct sound for which we have no single character. This combination has two sounds in English; aspirated, as in think, and vocal, as in that.

The letters ti, before a vowel, and unaccented, usually pass into the sound of sh, as in nation, motion, partial, substantiate; which are pronounced nashon, moshon, parshal, substanshate. In this case, t loses entirely its proper sound or use, and being blended with the subsequent letter, a new sound results from the combination, which is in fact a simple sound. In a few words, the combination ti has the sound of the English ch, as in Christian, mixture, question.

T is convertible with d. Thus the Germans write tag, where we write day, and gut, for good. It is also convertible with s and z, for the Germans write wasser, for water, and zahn, for tame.

T, as an abbreviation, stands for theologia; as, S. T. D. sanctæ theologiæ doctor, doctor of divinity. In ancient monuments and writings, T, is an abbreviature, which stands for Titus, Titius, or Tullius.

As a numeral, T, among the Latins, stood for 160, and with a dash over the top, T̄, for 160,000.

In music, T, is the initial of tenor, vocal and instrumental; of tacet, for silence, as adagio tacet, when a person is to rest during the whole movement. In concertos and symphonies, it is the initial of tutti, the whole band, after a solo. It sometimes stands for tr, or trillo, a shake.

than; D. dan. This word signifies also then, both in English and Dutch. The Germans express the sense by als, as.]

This word is placed after some comparative adjective or adverb, to express comparison between what precedes and what follows. Thus Elijah said, I am not better than my fathers. Wisdom is better than strength. Israel loved Joseph more than all his children. All nations are counted less than nothing. I who am less than the least of all saints. The last error shall be worse than the first. He that denies the faith is worse than an infidel.

After more, or an equivalent termination, the following word implies less, or worse; after less, or an equivalent termination, it implies more or better.

THANE, n. [Sax. ðegn, ðægn, a minister or servant; ðegnian, ðenian, to serve; D. & G. diener, to serve; Sw. tiener, to serve; tiener, a servant; Dan. tiener, to serve; tiener, a servant. If g is radical, this word belongs to Class Dg; if not, to Class Dn. No. 10.]

The thanes in England were formerly persons of some dignity; of these there were two orders, the king's thanes, who attended the Saxon and Danish kings in their courts, and held lands immediately of them; and the ordinary thanes, who were lords of manors, and who had a particular jurisdiction within their limits. After the Conquest, this title was disused, and baron took its place.

THANK, v. t. [Sax. ðancian; G. & D. danken; Ice. thacka; Sw. tacka; Dan. takker. We see by the Gothic dialects that n is not radical. To ascertain the primary sense, let us attend to its compounds; G. abdanken, [which in English would be off-thank,] to dismiss, discharge, discard, send away, put off, to disband or break, as an officer; verdanken, to owe [or be indebted]; D. af danken, to cashier or discharge. These senses imply a sending. Hence thank is probably from the sense of giving, that is, a render or return.]

TH'ARM, n. [Sax. ðearm; G. & D. darm.] Intestines twisted into a cord. [Local.]

THAT, an adjective, pronoun or substitute.

[Sax. ðæt, ðat; Goth. thata; D. dat; G. das; Dan. det; Sw. det. Qu. Gr. τὸς. This word is called in Saxon and German, an article, for it sometimes signifies the. It is called also in Saxon a pronoun, equivalent to id, istud, in Latin. In Swedish and Danish it is called a pronoun of the neuter gender. But these distinctions are groundless and of no use. It is probably from the sense of setting.]

1. That is a word used as a definitive adjective, pointing to a certain person or thing before mentioned, or supposed to be understood. "Here is that book we have been seeking this hour." "Here goes that man we were talking of."

It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city. Matth. x.

2. That is used definitively, to designate a specific thing or person emphatically.

The woman was made whole from that hour.

Matth. ix.

In these cases, that is an adjective. In the two first examples, the may be substituted for it. "Here is the book we have been seeking." "Here goes the man we were talking of." But in other cases, the cannot supply its place, and that may be considered as more emphatically definitive than the.

3. That is used as the representative of a noun, either a person or a thing. In this use, it is often a pronoun and a relative. When it refers to persons, it is equivalent to who, and when it refers to a thing, it is equivalent to which. In this use, it represents either the singular number or the plural.

He that reproveth a scorner, getteth to himself shame. Prov. ix.

They that hate me without a cause, are more than the hairs of my head. Ps. lxxiii.

A judgment that is equal and impartial, must incline to the greater probabilities. Wilkins.

They shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend. Matth. xiii.

4. That is also the representative of a sentence or part of a sentence, and often of a series of sentences. In this case, that is not strictly a pronoun, a word standing for a noun; but is, so to speak, a pro-sentence, the substitute for a sentence, to save the repetition of it.

And when Moses heard that, he was content.

Lev. x.

That here stands for the whole of what Aaron had said, or the whole of the preceding verse.

I will know your business, that I will. Shak.

Ye defraud, and that your brethren.

That sometimes in this use, precedes the sentence or clause to which it refers.

That be far from thee, to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked.

Gen. xviii.

That here represents the clause in italics.

5. That sometimes is the substitute for an adjective. You alledged that the man is innocent; that he is not.

6. That, in the following use, has been called a conjunction. "I heard that the Greeks had defeated the Turks." But in this case, that has the same character as in No. 4. It is the representative of the part of the sentence which follows, as may be seen by inverting the order of the clauses. "The Greeks had defeated the Turks; I heard that." "It is not that I love you less." That here refers to the latter clause of the sentence, as a kind of demonstrative.

7. That was formerly used for that which, like what.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen. John iii.

[This use is no longer held legitimate.]

8. That is used in opposition to this, or by way of distinction.

If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that. James iv.

9. When this and that refer to foregoing words, this, like the Latin hic, and French ceci, refers to the latter, and that to the former. It is the same with these and those.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire,

Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire ;

But greedy that, its object would devour,

This taste the honey, and not wound the flow'r. Pope.

10. That sometimes introduces an explanation of something going before. "Religion consists in living up to those principles ; that is, in acting in conformity to them." Here that refers to the whole first clause of the sentence.

11. "Things are preached, not in that they are taught, but in that they are published." Here that refers to the words which follow it.

So when that begins a sentence. "That we may fully understand the subject, let us consider the following propositions." That denotes purpose, or rather introduces the clause expressing purpose, as will appear by restoring the sentence to its natural order. "Let us consider the following propositions, that, [for the purpose expressed in the following clause,] we may fully understand the subject." "Attend that you may receive instruction." Here also that expresses purpose elliptically ; "Attend for the purpose that, you may receive instruction," that referring to the last number.

In that, a phrase denoting consequence, cause or reason ; that referring to the following sentence.

THATCH, n. [Sax. ðac, connected with ðeccan, ðecan, to cover, L. tego, Eng. deck ; G. dach, a roof ; D. dak ; Sw. tak ; Dan. tag, tække ; Gaelic, tughe, tuighe. The primary sense is to put on, to spread over or make close.]

THAW, v. t. To melt ; to dissolve ; as ice, snow, hail or frozen earth.

THE, an adjective, or definitive adjective. [Sax. ðe ; D. de. Qu. Ch. ær.]

1. This adjective is used as a definitive, that is, before nouns which are specific or understood ; or it is used to limit their signification to a specific thing or things, or to describe them ; as, the laws of the twelve tables. The independent tribunals of justice in our country, are the security of private rights, and the best bulwark against arbitrary power. The sun is the source of light and heat.

2. The is also used rhetorically before a noun in the singular number, to denote a species by way of distinction ; a single thing representing the whole. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs ; the almond-tree shall flourish ; the grasshopper shall be a burden.

3. In poetry, the sometimes loses the final vowel before another vowel.

THINE, pronominal adj. [Goth. theins, theima; Sax. ðin; G. dein; Fr. tien; probably contracted from ðizen. See Thou.]

Thy; belonging to thee; relating to thee; being the property of thee. It was formerly used for thy, before a vowel.

Then thou mightest eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleasure. Deut. xxxii.

But in common usage, thy is now used before a vowel in all cases.

The principal use of thine now is when a verb is interposed between this word and the noun to which it refers. I will not take any thing that is thine. Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory.

In the following passage, thine is used as a substitute for thy righteousness.

I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only. Ps. lxxi.

In some cases, it is preceded by the sign of the possessive case, like nouns, and is then also to be considered as a substitute.

If any of thine be driven out to the utmost parts of heaven— Deut. xxx.

It is to be observed that thine, like thou, is used only in the solemn style. In familiar and common language, your and yours are always used in the singular number as well as the plural.

THING, n. [Sax. ðing, a thing, a cause; pop. hij ðingon, for his cause or sake; also, ðing and geþing, a meeting, council or convention; ðingon, ðingian, to hold a meeting, to plead, to supplicate; ðing-epe, an intercessor; ðingunz, intercession; G. ding, a thing, a court; dingen, to go to law, to hire or haggle; Dingstag, Tuesday, [thing's day]; beding, condition, clause; bedingen, to agree, to bargain or contract, to cheapen; D. ding thing, business; dingen, to plead, to attempt, to cheapen; dingbank, the bar; dingdagen, session-days; dingen, dingster, a pleader; dingtaal, plea; Dingsdag, Tuesday; beding, condition, agreement; bedingen, to condition; Sw. ting, thing, cause, also a court, assizes; tinga, to hire, bargain or agree; Dan. ting, a thing, affair, business, case, a court of justice; tinger, to strike up a bargain, to haggle; tingbog, records of a court, [thing-book]; tingdag, the court day, the assizes; tinghold, jurisdiction; tingmænd, jurors, jury, [thing-men]; tingsag, a cause or suit at law, [thing-sake]. The primary sense of thing is that which comes, falls or happens, like event, from L. evenio. The primary sense of the root, which is tz or tzg, is to press, urge, drive or strain, and hence its application to courts, or suits at law; a seeking of right. We observe that Dingsdag, Dingdag, in some of the dialects signifies Tuesday, and this from the circumstance that that day of the week was, as it still is in some states, the day of opening courts; that is, litigation day, or suitors' day, a day of striving for justice; or perhaps combat-day, the day of trial by battle. This leads to the unfolding of another fact. Among our ancestors, Tiz or Tuz, was the name of the deity of combat and war, the Teutonic Mars; that is, strife, combat deified. This word was contracted into tz or tu, and hence Tizer-dæg or Tuer-dæg, Tuesday, the day consecrated to Tuz, the god of war. But it seems this is merely the day of commencing court and trial; litigation day. This Tuz, the god of war, is strife, and this leads us to the root of thing, which is to drive, urge, strive. So res, in Latin, is connected with reus, accused. For words of like signification, see Sake and Cause.]

1. An event or action; that which happens or falls out, or that which is done, told or proposed. This is the general signification of the word in the Scriptures; as, after these things, that is, events.
